The Causes of Our Defeat.

It will hardly profit ourselves or our readers to detain them with vain speculations as to the causes of our late Waterloo defeat, and indeed we would at once decide, that the future would be a better period for examining into these matters when we have entirely recovered from our hard fall, and when the facts which produced it had been more fully discovered in the different sections of the country, were it not that it is alike due to ourselves and our fellow citizens, to express our abiding confidence in the integrity of the principles of our platform, no matter what influence it may have had in producing our late disaster. We have long since endorsed that platform, not because we thought it popular, not because we thought it would catch either the abstractionists of the South or the fanatics of the North, but because we believed it to contain principles alike in harmony with the Constitution and the rights of all parts of our Union. We hesitate not to say, that without a platform, and without one nearly at least, if not exactly similar to that adopted by the Baltimore Whig Convention, we never would, for one moment have supported the nominee of that Convention. We even go further, & assert that had not that platform endorsed the fugitive slave law, had it not declared for the finality of the Compromise measures of the session of 1850, we would not have touched it, or the nominee placed upon it. We advocate principles first, men next, and if there is in the broad pages of the Constitution a provision sacred to the existence of our Union, if there be found in it one principle upon which, above all others, we are prepared to stand or fall, that principle is contained in the section of the Constitution which solemnly provides for the rendition of fugitives from justice, and from labor. That clause was the great Compromise clause of the Constitution. Without it, the Constitution never could and never should have been formed. Upon this clause rests the peace, the security of the entire South and the very existence of our Union; and we believe we speak the sentiments of our entire population of both parties, when we say, that so long as our Constitution contains that solemn guaranty to the South, so long as the flag of our country waves over a Union under that Constitution, so long will the citizens of Wheeling stand by this pledge, and fall if need be in defence of this Compromise compact of our fathers.

We are Union men all, we are compromise men all, and above all are we Virginians, and so long as we remain such, so long will we stand or fall with Virginia in defence of her Constitutional rights, so long will we advocate the fugitive slave law, a law passed in conformity with this corner stone clause of the Constitution, and if that law from any cause should fall short of its proposed end, namely, the recovering of all slaves who escape from the South, we will then go with him who gaes the farthest in favor of so amending it as that it will to the letter subserve the objects of the Constitution and protect the rights and prosperity of the South. We were born and bred in Virginia, and we expect to die beneath the flag which has inscribed upon it "sic semper tyrannis," and so long as we respect the memory of our revolutionary fathers, so long as we glory in the right and the just fame of our Virginia, so long will we stand by her in the defence of her rights and in the protection of the property, solemnly guaranteed her by the Constitution of our Union. We speak for ourselves and we believe that the whole body of our citizens will stand or fall with Virginia in the support of the rights, so solemnly guaranteed by the Constitution.

We advocate platforms always when there is any room for doubt as to any party principle, and we approve of and did advocate the Whig Baltimore platform as containing no one principle more important and more indispensable to the rights of the South and the duties of the North, that the noble, manly and final stand which it took upon the compromise measures in general, and the Fugitive Slave law in particular.

We advocate openness aed boldness in everything, and we prefer seeing the Whig party defeated, as it has been, upon its open and manly platform of honest principles, rather than to have beheld it successful, by covin and deception.

Billy Bowlegs, Grand Sachem of the Seminoles in Florids, has returned to Tampa, and taken pas-sage for Fort Myers. His joy on embarking for Port Myers knew no bounds. He leaped and yell-ed, cursed and swore like a crazy man; and during his caperings he tore a new suit of citizen's clothes into a thousand ribbons. About this time a sol-dier at Tampa said, "Now, Billy, give us the war whoop." Billy stood as if riveted to the spot, his eyes seemed to send forth sparks of fire, and draw-ing himself up to his full height, he exclaimed in a low, yet passionate voice, "By blood! when you hear the war whoop, your blood will cutdle in your weins!" In reply to a question put to him by an officer at Tampa. "So you are going to leave Florida, are you!" He answered, with a very knowing laugh, "Oh, yes, I told them so in Washington; but d—d if I do it, though." If he don't go, and that very soon too, Uncle Sam will find a way to make them leave, either by steamboat or 'by blood!" They can take their choice. They can take their choice.

TA shock of an earthquake was felt in Richmond, and adjacent parts of Virginia on Tuesday evening, at about half past six o'clock. A writer in the Richmond Whig says:

The sensation to the writer and others, was as if a heavily laden wagon was passing, creating a singular and uncontrollable nervous vibration. singular and uncontrollable nervous vibration.

About 40'clock last evening, a miniature hurricane swept by—the wind blew in whirlwinds, stripping the trees of their dying glories—accompanied by some little rain. The writer felt this peculiar nervous shock of an earthquake once before. (It is unlike any other sensation or shudder.) It was just after they break, about 1834 or 1835. THE TURKISH LOAN.—The London correspondent of the New York Commercial writes under LONDON, Oct. 22, 1652.

For the last few days the chief subject of interest in London has been the attempt, by the Senate of Turkey, to avoid the ratification of the recent loan, ted in Paris and London for $19,000,000,-The scrip was between 11 and 13 premium when the first intelligence arrived of difficulties in the Turkish Cabinet, and a fall immediately commenced, which was not arrested until yesterday, the lowest price reached, having been 34 prem.

The details of the affair are as yet very imper-

The details of the affair are as yet very imper-fectly known, but as it appears to involve politi-cal considerations of importance, it has attracted a great degree of attention, apart from that which has been bestowed upon it from its pecuniary bearings. As far as any general inference can be drawn from the isolated facts have transpired, it would appear that Russia and Austria, mortified at Turkey hav-ing entered into independent and successful nego-tiations with Fiance and England, resolved immediately to cause the overthrow of the Ministry by whom the step had been taken. Hence, although the negotiations for the loan had been authorized by a preliminary firman, while each stage of the edings had been duly sanctioned by the nance Minister, (the Turkish Ambassador at Paris having actually signed the scripts) they persuaded the Sultan, after the whole had been completed, to quarrel with his Ministers regarding the terms that had been agreed to, and to summon a new Cab-inet that would be prepared to disavow all the:r

To give strength to the movement, the services of chiefs of the Mahomedan priestood were likewise enlisted; and these parties, who are in possession of enormcus revenues, went with an offer to the Sultan to let him have the loan of the same amount upon much better conditions than that which he was urged to repudiate. After the dis-missal of the late Ministers, a story was got up also that they had refused certain advances required by the Sultan at a time when there was actually $10,-000,000 in the treasury, and while this seemed to show that the loan had been contracted without any necessity. it served at the same time to create a pre-judice against the fallen Cabinet, as if they had een guilty of concealment and an attempt at mis-

There is no reason, however, to believe that any thing of the sort had taken place, the demand of the Sultan having probably been made at the sug-gestion of the parties to the intrigue, who knew that the Ministers would feel bound, from the general state of the finances, to decline compliance with it. How far the plot may yet be successful, remains to be seen. From the predominant, al-though secret influence of Russia and Austria by the universal use of bribes, there can be little doubt that it would have been triumphantly carridoubt that it would have been trumphanty carried out but for the interference of the French Ambassador. On behalf of the holders of the stock in Paris, this personage at once protested against the evasion that was being practized, and insisted either that the loan should be ratified forthwith, or that the deposite already paid should be returned with full damages to all the parties who had purchased the stock at a premium. His course, it is said, has been fully approved by the French Government, and it would therefore appear that there can be little prospect of escape from the Sultan.—In fact, it has been reported that after one or two In fact, it has been reported that after one or two fresh efforts to avoid the demand, compliance was negotiations.

If the ratification is actually obtained, the anger of Russia and Austria, who have not forgotten their old spite regarding the sheltered Hungarians, will be intense. On the part of Austria, moreover, this feeling will be quickened by the annoyance she feels at the confidence with which the loan was originally received, while her own recent loan, even with all the influence of the Rothchilds to back t; has already fallen, like the previous one, to a discount from which there is no prospect of its ri-

The political aspects of the case are remarkable inasmuch as it places France as a competing power against Austria in Turkey, as she is already in Italy. The most bitter jealousy will arise from this and there can be very little doubt that France would improve the opportunity except that just now it would militate against the President's decnow it would militate against the President's deci-laration that 'the Empire means peace.' In fact, this last consideration may yet lead to some compro-mise, since, if Austr a and Russia could be molli-fied, till the period of the coronation, by the sac-rifice of the scrip holders on the Paris Bourse, it

Autumnal Poliage.

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

The beautiful appearance of the autumnal fol-iage, which this year seems almost to surpass in gor-geousness that of any previous season, often induc-cesan inquiry as to the reason of the change which a few frosty nights make in the green livery of our rees and forests. The question is parely a chen trees and forests. The question is parely a chemi-cal one, and one, moreover, about which there is no very general agreement of opinion. In fact, there is no subject among natural phenomena more difficulty to explain than this change in the consti-tution or arrangement of matter, whereby a partic-ular body is caused to redect or absorb light in such a way that it assumes at one time a wholly different color. These changes are very far from being comined to any one species of matter. The trout which, on sandy bottom, has a yellow, speckled which, on sainly octomer, has a yeardy person, hue, becomes dark, brown, or blue beneath a shad-ed bank; the yellow of the weasel and the rabbit, maintained during the summer months, is already changing to white; and it is susceptible of rigid de-monstration that the blue of the Octobersky is not the same, either in tint or quality, with that which welcomed the bursting of the leaf in the months of April or May.

The general supposition in regard to the change of the leaves is this: When the tree or plant is in full activity, its foliage, it is well known, absorbs carbonic acid and disengages oxygen. When, now, through the influence of a sufficiently low temperthrough the influence of a sufficiently low temperature, or from any other cause, the functions of vegetable life are suspended, and the fluids cease to circulate, the leaves no longer disengage oxygen, but, in common with all dead bodies, absorb this gas, which, forming an acid, changes the colors of leaves either to yellow, red, or some intermediate shade, depending on the quality of the matter present in the leaves. It has also been asserted that this acid can be neutralized by an akali. ed that this acid can be neutralized by an akali, and the green restored. This is not, however, the case. A leafdoes not become green by any re-agent; but when it has become red, a solution of potash will change it to green, because the red coloring matter forms green compounds with that akali. Berzelius, the great Swelish chemist, spent considerable time in investigating this subject. He found that when the yellow leaves were treated with alcohol, they yielded a granular substance, which had a tendency to crystalization, and also a yellow, soft, fatty substance, which appeared identical with the grains. These contained the yellow d that this acid can be neutralized by an akali yellow, soft, fatty substance, which appeared identical with the grains. These contained the yellow coloring matter of the leaves, which is described as a yellow, fatty, unctious substance, easily melted, and on cooling becoming concrete and transparent. When moistened with water, and long exposed to the air and light, it loses its color entitely. Berzelius was of the opinion that the transformation of the green coloring matter of the leaf into a yellow is effected by a change in the organization of the leaf produced by the frost. Every effort to reproduce the yellow proved fruitless; neither could he succeed in changing the green coloring matter to yellow. The red coloring matter of the leaves has been also extracted, and is believed to be the same with that of red fruits. ter of the leaves has been also extracted, and is believed to be the same with that of red fruits.—

The brown color which leaves assume when completely withered has nothing in common with either of the other colors. It is produced by an extractive principle, originally colorless, but which, when the epidermis or out layer of the leaf structure has decayed off, is acted upon by the oxygen of the air. decayed off, is acted upon by the oxygen of the air, and communicates to the fibrous skeleton of the leaf the well-known brown color. This color is one of the most fixed and unchangeable with which we are acquainted, and cannot be impaired or detroyed by the most powerful chemical re-agents.— Phis, we believe, embodies all that is at present known, scientifically speaking, respecting the change of the leaves. The different appearance presented by different trees must be referred to a difference in their nature, and the different changes observed in different countries and locations un doubtedly owing to different climatic conditions.

A Royal Botanist.

There is one king in Europe who is a good practical botanist and who must look back upon the hours spent in the arrangement of his fine herbarium with far more pleasure than upon those wasted in a vain and retrogade course of politics. The mon-arch in questiou is his majesty of Saxony, who, in his scientific career at least, has gained honor and respect. Many are the stories told by his subjects of their ruler's adventure when following his favorite and harmless hobby; how, more than once, astray from his yawning courtiers, he had wander-ed in search of some vegetable rarity across the frontier of his legitimate dominions, and on attempt-ing to return was locked up by his own guards as a spy or a smuggler, since he could produce no passe-port nor give any more probable account of himself than the preposterous assertion that he was their king. Fifteen years ago, he made a famous excursion to the stony and piratical little republic of Montenegro. It was literally a voyage of botanical discovery, and the potentate sailed down the Adra-tic in a steamer fitted out with all the appliances scientific investigation. On its deck, he might be seen busily engaged in laying out his plants, ably and zealously assisted by hisequerries and aides-decamp, and guided by the advice of eminent botanist who accompanied him as members of his suite. Such a kingly progress had surely never been seen before, unless Alexander the Great may have relieved the monotony of conquering by making occa-sional natural history excursions with his quandam tutor Aristotle. The Montenegrins, on ordinary occasions very troublesome and by no means trust-worthy people—folks who still keep many of the worst habits of the old Scottish Highlanders—were worst habits of the old Scottish Highlanders—were mystyfied into tranquillity by the peculiar proceedings of their royal visitor and his noble attendants. Resolved, however, to render due honor to so distinguished and unusual a guest, they furnished a guard of State to accompany him in all his perigrinations; and whenever his botanical majesty stooped to gather a new or rare specimen, the soldiers halted and with much ceremony presented arms.— West-minster Review.

HUMAN FAT, CANDLES AND SOAP .- When the emetery of the Innocents, of Paris, was iemoved utside of the barriers, the suried corpses, which ad accumulated to the depth of bixty feet, were found to a great extent upparently converted into fat. The sub-tance of the skin, cellular tissue and tendons, all the soft part, and even the bones, had completely disappeared, leaving only the fat, which, resisting longest the influence of decay (oxygen) reresisting longest the influence of decay (oxygen) remainded in the form of margaric acid. This human fat was employed, to the extent of many tons, by the soap boilers and tallow chandlers of Paris for the macutacture of soap and candles. The French are a people of finest sentiment and they certainly carried the quality to a charming point of reflection in receiving light from candles made out of the bodies of their fathers.

TWhen the merchants of Breslau once applied to Frederick the Great for protection against the ruinous competition of Jewish dealers, the monarch asked how the Jewis managed to draw business into their hands. The answer was that they were up early and late, always travelling about, lived very economically and were contended with small gains on rapid returus. "Very well," said the enlighten-monarch, "go and be Jews, too, in the conduct of LAKE SHORE RAILROAD .- We learn that but eleven miles of the railroad between Cleveland and Buffalo, on the lake shore, remains unfinished. The tract is nearly ready, and if there is no delay in the receipt of the iron, the road will be open from Cleveland, via Erie, to Buffalo, by the 10th Newsbar. of November. There will be no suspension of business this winter in consequence of the close of the navigation. This will be an important era in the northern winter travel.

The Richmond papars state that the grand ury of that city have found true bills against Charles W. Purcell, President of the Southern Manufacturers' Banks, W. N.
